Man's first voyage to Mars

Man's first voyage to Mars is now being planned by a group of scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, Pasadena, Calif. The group is headed by Dr. William S. Burrows, who is the director of the Mars program. The group is planning a mission to Mars in the late 1970s or early 1980s. The mission would involve a crew of four people and a robotic lander. The lander would be used to explore the surface of Mars and collect samples. The crew would be responsible for operating the lander and conducting experiments. The mission would be the first time that humans have traveled to another planet.
